Everything was cheap—flour $2 per sack, ham 17 cents per pound, eggs 25 cents per pound, egg and a piece of frozen bacon. When my work was done I crawled into the sleeping sack dressed as I had been on the trail. When supper was ready I ate it with my bood and mittens on. But my tea got cold before I could drink it; the beans seemed never to have been warmed up; the fork froze to my lips. The bisenits and doughnuts were so hard that I first cut then up with the ax that I might be able to cat them. I was glad when my appetite was satisfied, glad when we could draw the hood of the sleeping sack.
